CHAPTER I
INTRODUCTION

This chapter deals with background of the research, statement of problem, research objective, research significance and definition of the key terms.

1.1 Background

Language is the most important aspect in the life of all being. Language is the people capacity for acquiring and using complex systems of communication and a language is any specific example of such a system. Language is the most proper means for above needs. By using language, people can express their thoughts, feelings, and desires, as Priestly said, ‘‘language is a method of conveying our ideas to the minds of other person’’ (Priestly, 1968:216, in Alwasilah, 1993:9). Besides, language enables the people to respond the stimulus that given by other people as well. People use language to express their thoughts, emotions to communicate with others, to fulfill what human wants and needs. Language can be defined as verbal, physical, biologically innate, and a basic form of communication. Behaviorists often define language as a learned behavior involving a stimulus and a response (Ormrod. 1995). Often times they will refer to language as verbal behavior, which is language that includes gestures and body movements as well as spoken word (Pierce. 1999).

Furthermore, language is a system of communication. People use language for communicating. Many people used any language for communication because every different language contains different cultures as well, included code switching. The code-switching is the change of one language to another within the same utterance or in the same oral or written text. It is a common phenomenon in societies in which two or more languages are used. Code-switching refers to the switching of two or more languages or language varieties in speech.
Code-switching is a very interesting aspect of bilingualism that has recently received considerable attention from linguists. It is defined as the use of more than one language by communicants in the execution of a speech act or the alteration of two languages or the use of two or more linguistic varieties in the same conversation or interaction. The phenomenon of code-switching spreads widely among members of communities of minority languages in a country whose official language is that of the majority. It becomes especially common if the bilingual's language is similar to that of the larger group he/she is living in. For example, code-switching is much more practiced between English and French than between English and Chinese and than between English and Indonesia.

Code-switching can involve a word, a phrase, or a sentence; it can involve several sentences. This alternate use of items from two language systems in the same utterance begins early in bilingual children. The facility with which young bilingual learns to use the two languages simultaneously is astonishing. Besides children code-switching is worthwhile studying since it is distinct from adult's code-switching in a number of ways. Recent research on bilingualism has already isolated these differences.

Just Alvin is one of talk show programs in Metro TV, in which the guests use Bahasa mixed with English to answer the question of Host. It is defined as Code-switching. Bilingual program gives various effects to the viewers, they can learn English spoken by the guest star on the talk show, the participants feel interested in bilingual talk show and they enjoy the bilingual talk show. Therefore, the writer is interested in knowing what types and reasons of code-switching used by the guest. It simply means types and reasons of code-switching found in Talk Show of Just Alvin are what is going to be analyzed in this research.

1.5 Definition of Key Terms

As stated in wikibooks.org by defining what the key terms mean, we do two things. Firstly, we show that we know what we are writing about. Secondly, we avoid misunderstandings by settling on a single understanding of the key terms. In line with that views the researcher notes definition of key term that should know by the readers.
