Abstract

The issue of classroom incivility is prevalent in the field of education, as evidenced by its occurrence among students at MTs X in Ciamis Regency. Therefore, this study aims to identify the influence of parental involvement and school climate on classroom incivility at MTs X in Ciamis Regency. The research design using causality approach and a total 77 students were taken by census methods. The results of this study yielded an $F = 8.672$ and significance (p) < 0.05 , indicating that parental involvement and school climate collectively influence classroom incivility with an effect size of 19%. Upon closer examination during partial testing, it was found that school climate contributes significantly more to classroom incivility, while parental involvement only has a minor contribution, thus not significantly affecting it. The implications of this research urge schools to enhance school climate adequately to mitigate classroom incivility among students.
