Title	Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice
Article type	Original Article
Abstract	Objective. Exploration of the psychological factors of conflict-related action among Sundanese Muslim students in Indonesia. Background. Religious-based conflicts have been widely examined in various disciplines, attracting responses and factors in every cultural context. Study design. Study 1 used an indigenous-based survey and was analyzed by thematic analysis. Study 2 examined the role of political ideology and perceived injustice in conflict-related behavior using hierarchical regression analysis. Participants. Study 1: 224 people (35,7% of men, 64,3% of women) from 18 to 49 years old ($M = 20,98$; $SD = 3,72$). Study 2: 494 people (35,6% of men, 64,4% of women) from 17 to 49 years old ($M = 20,00$; $SD = 1,52$). Measurements. Indonesian-language versions of the scales of religious fundamentalism ideology by Muluk and colleagues, violent extremist attitude by Nivette and colleagues, nonviolent direct action by Brown and colleagues, and sensitivity to injustice by Schmitt and colleagues. Results. Study 1 showed specific patterns of cognitive, emotional, and behavioral responses. There are differences in the respondents' responses to conflicts between and within religions. These differences are caused by ideology orientation towards religion and perception of injustice towards their groups. Study 2 confirmed Study 1 that religious fundamentalism predicts both violent and nonviolent behavior. Also, perceived injustice of victims moderates the effect of religious fundamentalism to violent behavior. Meanwhile, perceived injustice of perpetrators predicts only nonviolent behavior. Conclusions. There is a significant effect of religious-based ideology and perceived injustice on conflict-related behavior in the Sundanese Muslim context.
Full Text	Introduction Conflict usually happens [3] in interpersonal relationships or between groups. The development of social media encourages conflicts to develop and escalate in an uncontrollable direction. Social media increases information dissemination and facilitates communication and the emergence of new information that could strengthen conflict [58]. Religious-based conflicts have recently attracted much attention. In addition to the easily exposed and escalated information through social media, conflicts often involve ideology, beliefs, and emotions with a strong influence on behavior [10]. Religion is a central belief system that regulates permissible and impermissible actions and is capable of evoking and controlling sacred emotions [7]. An incomprehensive religious understanding might lead to erroneous beliefs and generate negative emotions, prejudice, discrimination, and violence that contradict religious values. Furthermore, religious-based conflicts involve many people from various parts of the world. Since conflicts generally occur through social media, they involve technology-literate young people who may lack personal maturity [39]. Monahan, Steinberg, Cauffman, & Mulvey stated that the immaturity of psychological function among students is associated with antisocial behavior, especially amid conflicts [26]. The emergence of radicalism among Muslim students has attracted Indonesians' attention. Setara Institute for Democracy and Peace study entitled "Religious Discourse and Movements Among Students: Mapping Threats to the Pancasila State in State University" lists ten universities whose students were exposed to radicalism [36]. In line with this, even the Indonesian Institute of Sciences (2017) insisted that "Radicalism Among Students is Worrying" [23]. This condition is worrisome because its offline and online development is uncontrollable [57] since it is often associated with violent behavior. The claim about the emergence of radicalism regarding religion-based conflict among Sundanese Muslim students is interesting to explore for three reasons. First, conflict-related thoughts, feelings, and behaviors are influenced by cultural factors [50]. Ecological factors also affect the formation of individual characteristics [50]. Therefore, Sundanese Muslim students' thoughts, feelings, and behavior are influenced by their cultural values. The Sundanese are the second largest ethnicity in Indonesia, after the Javanese. The Central Bureau of Statistics showed that nearly 36,6 million or 15,5% of Sundanese live in West Java Province. In-group and out-group Sundanese are polite, courteous, friendly, gentle, loving, religious, creative, diligent, and tolerant and enjoy socializing and working together [31].

They have a life philosophy of 'sumuhun dawuh' (accepting), "sadaya daya" (surrendering), and "heurin ku letah" (not being blunt). This philosophy may make them less assertive and less likely to demand their rights [34]. Subsequently, Sundanese Muslim students are anti-violent and intolerant of radicalism.

Second, religion is sometimes associated with violence because religious people are more vulnerable to violence than secular people [21; 55]. However, empirical studies on the relationship between religion and violence show inconsistent results. Baier found that religiosity is not associated with violence against Muslim or Christian youth [1]. It is influenced by friendship, self-control, alcohol consumption, and masculine norms [1]. Furthermore, Wright found that religious claims related to violence were not empirically proven [54]. Religion protects students from antisocial behaviors [56] and increases helping behavior [12].

Islam, the religion embraced by Muslim students in this study, is often associated with violence. However, the holy book teaches Muslims to tolerate differences [40] and respect human values [47]. They are also taught to uphold justice [44; 45], promote prosocial behavior [41; 42; 43] and respect differences [48]. Proper internalization of anti-violence values minimizes the potential for violence due to other influencing factors.

Third, conflicts are associated with both violent and nonviolent behavior. Violent behavior can be physical, psychological, emotional, moral, economic, political, philosophical, or metaphysical. This behavior includes hate speech, hoaxes, character assassination, and cyberbullying on social media.

Nonviolent behavior in conflict situations does not solely imply doing nothing [8] or being a substitute for violent behavior because it is powerless. According to Eyo and Ibanga, the behavior also IMPLIES taking the initiative and striving to resolve conflicts without violence [8]. Nonviolent behavior could involve demonstrating, protesting, submitting petitions, or being uncooperative.

The factors influencing behavior in conflict situations include the widely examined concept of ideology, which requires further analysis. Ideology is an individual orientation about how a country should be regulated in social, economic, and religious matters [27]. It guides thinking and behaving when faced with problems [9]. Ideological differences influence the variations in motivation, cognition, and social interaction [14]. Additionally, extreme ideology promotes the emergence of violent thoughts, motivations, and behaviors in conflict situations [2; 38; 52].

Ideology is structurally complex, comprising knowledge structures about interrelated beliefs, opinions, and values. Cognitive factors also play a role in forming conflict-related actions. Individuals fight for justice when they feel that their groups are treated unfairly by other parties, a phenomenon known as perceived injustice. Previous studies have found that perceived injustice accompanied by angry emotions, group identification, social identity, and dark personality traits promotes violence or extremism [29]. Therefore, it is interesting to analyze the role of psychology and culture in shaping religion-based conflict that involves violent and nonviolent behavior.

Methods

Study 1. The first study aimed to explore Sundanese Muslim students' cognitive, emotional, and behavioral responses to religious-based conflicts and the influencing factors. Religion-based conflicts include inter- and intrareligious conflicts. The study used a survey with an indigenous approach to obtain responses from respondents regarding their experiences of conflicts. Therefore, the survey set consisted of 8 open-ended questions and was distributed online to 224 students from several universities in Indonesia. The participants comprised 80 male and 144 female students. Based on ethnicity, 146 participants were Sundanese, while 78 were non-Sundanese. The collected data were analyzed thematically using NVivo, followed by coding, categorization, and interpretation.

Study 2. The second study aimed to examine the role of ideological factors and perceived injustice using quantitative method. The participants consisted of 494 Muslim students from various universities in Indonesia. They come from various ethnic groups and have social organization affiliations. Some students have backgrounds in Nahdlatul Ulama, Muhammadiyah, Islamic Association (Persis), PMII, Indonesian Muslim Association (HMI), KAMMI, and Muhammadiyah Student Association (IMM).

The analysis was conducted on violent behavior, nonviolent behavior, perceived injustice, and religious fundamentalism ideology. Data were collected online using a political ideology-religious fundamentalism scale of 8 items [27], a violent extremist attitude scale of 4 items [24], a nonviolent action scale of 6 items [4], and a sensitivity to injustice scale of 30 items [35]. Descriptive analysis was performed on the variables whose relationship was determined using correlational analysis through SPSS. Moreover, hierarchical regression analysis was used to examined the effect of predictor and moderator variables.

Results

Study 1. The results showed specific cognitive, emotional, and behavioral patterns and psychological factors that influenced the conflict.

Cognitive, emotional, and behavioral responses. There are differences in cognitive responses to intra- and interreligious conflicts (table 1). The most common cognitive response is "questioning the reasons for the conflict". The second most common interreligious cognitive response was "thinking about how the conflict was resolved". Additionally, the second most common cognitive response to intrareligious conflict was "not thinking about".

In the interreligious conflict, there was no demographic difference in the response. However, there were differences in responses between males and females regarding intrareligious conflicts. The male participants' response was dominated by being normal or not thinking about it, while the female participants responded by asking about the trigger for the conflict. One participant stated that:

"What I thought at the time, how can people who understand religion well enough but do things that trigger conflict, what do they think and what is their purpose in doing something like this? That's what still surprises me."

In the context of ethnicity, most Sundanese participants questioned why conflicts arose and considered resolving them. Non-Sundanese participants did not think about or identify the causes of the conflicts. Participants considered resolving conflicts by respecting each other and avoiding violence. One participant responded as follows:

"How can I make fellow Muslims respect each other in terms of furu'iyyah. Moreover, it also keeps Muslims loyal to others, not harsh to others. There are even those who are harsh on fellow Muslims, but soft on non-Muslims."

Some participants indicated that the impact had a more emotional aspect and was related to their religious identity, stating:

"I don't think about it; I just do not like it when my religion is vilified."

The participants' emotions when watching intra- and interreligious conflicts were generally negative (table 2). The results showed that 36 of the participants' emotional responses to interreligious conflicts were sad, 29 were afraid, and 33 were annoyed. In contrast, 44 of the participants' emotional responses to intrareligious conflicts were mediocre, 33 were sad, and 35 were upset. In intrareligious conflicts, there was no difference in emotional reactions between Sundanese and non-Sundanese or male and female respondents. However, there were differences in the emotional responses to interreligious conflicts. The response of "do not feel anything" was given by 9 male participants and 10 non-Sundanese.

Meanwhile, the most common behavioral response to inter- and intrareligious-based conflicts (table 3) was staying silent and observing the ongoing conflict. One participant was more focused on the government's role in dealing with the conflict:

"I only listen to the steps or actions of the government and related institutions to overcome this problem."

Some participants resigned to Allah SWT:

"When there is a heated debate regarding differences in religious understanding, I just keep quiet and listen while taking refuge in Allah from the narrowness of thinking."

The second most common answer was to intervene, as demonstrated in the following example:

"I have witnessed interreligious conflicts. If the topic is still within my reach, I will participate in mediating the dispute.

However, if the topic of conflict is difficult enough, I don't think it's in my realm to interfere and I'm afraid I'll say the wrong thing if I don't understand what's being said, hence in this situation, I prefer to just listen and let someone with higher understanding take over."

Other participants sought information:

"I consulted with experts and looked for valid sources. If there is a difference of opinion, but the source is clear, it doesn't matter (following their respective schools of thought). But for matters of faith that are not appropriate, they should be straightened out."

Another response was to take lessons and avoid conflict. There are no differences in behavioral responses to intrareligious conflicts based on gender or ethnicity. However, 18 males preferred resolving or avoiding interreligious conflicts, compared to only 12 females.

Religious-based ideology and injustice perception as influential factors. The analysis showed that the psychological factor with the most influence on religion-based conflict was misperception, with 111 responses. A participant stated that the cause was:

"a lack of understanding about other religions besides the one they profess, not understanding each other, being provoked by various parties and misinformation."

Other participants also highlighted the importance of obeying the Islamic law:

"I just conveyed my understanding of the religion and listen to the opinions of other people who have different understandings and respect what he understands as long as it does not deviate from the Shari'a and limitation."

"Disputes in religious understanding may be caused by differences in school or sources of understanding. Therefore, as long as it is still sourced from the Qur'an, hadith, scholars, it is still said to be reasonable."

Responses of the participants indicate that their belief to implement religion in their daily lives (religious fundamentalism ideology) dan perception of their religious group should be treated fairly (perceived injustice) may become the roots of their psychological responses related to the conflict.

Study 2. Correlational analysis showed that fundamentalist students positively related to violent behavior ($r = 0,110, p = 0,018$) and nonviolent behavior ($r = 0,107, p = 0,021$). Student violent behavior is also related to perceived injustice ($r = 197, p \leq 0,001$). The relationship between perceived injustice and violent behavior varies for victims and observers. The analysis showed that the perceived injustice as a victim ($r = 0,237, p \leq 0,001$) has a greater relationship than as an observer ($r = 0,167, p \leq 0,001$). Similarly, nonviolent behavior was associated with perceived injustice ($r = 0,172, p \leq 0,001$). It was more positively related to perceived injustice as victims ($r = 0,274, p \leq 0,001$) rather than as an observer ($r = 0,146, p \leq 0,001$).

Hierarchical regression analysis showed that participants with the ideology of religious fundamentalism exhibit more violent behavior when they also have perceived injustice as victims and observers (table 4). The influence of religious fundamentalism on violent behavior increased upon adding the perceived injustice ($\beta = 0,095, p < 0,05$). Therefore, perceived injustice increases the relationship between religious fundamentalism and violent behavior.

Hierarchical regression analysis also showed that religious fundamentalism predicts nonviolent behavior (table 5). Furthermore, perceived injustice as victims positively predicts nonviolent behavior ($\beta = 0,289, p < 0,01$) while perceived injustice as perpetrators shows negative effect ($\beta = -0,114, p < 0,05$). Meanwhile, there is no moderating effect of perceived injustice on the relationship between religious fundamentalism and nonviolent actions.

Discussion

The results of the analysis in the first study show that there are patterns of cognitive, emotional and behavioral responses, including psychological and social factors. First, the main responses about psychological factors include a lack of understanding of religions other than one's own or misperceptions. Misperceptions of interreligious people can trigger conflicts, followed by egoism-fanaticism, intolerant attitudes and ways of thinking, beliefs, negative emotions, and the ability to regulate emotions.

Reid-Quiñones et al. examined differences in adolescent cognitive, affective, and behavioral responses to violence between witnesses and victims of conflicts [32]. However, they found no differences between gender groups. This study showed differences in cognitive responses across genders. Males prefer not to think about conflicts, while females question the causes.

The results of the analysis in the second study show that social factors, including group differences and ethnocentrism, are the largest contributors to the response to religious-based conflicts, followed by the influence of provocation. Social norms and intolerant cultures are quite influential contributors, followed by traditions or habits as the least contributing factor. Social norms and culture, including race, gender, and social classes related to religion, can trigger religious-based conflict in this modern cultural situation [51]. Internalizing identity as part of an ingroup is one of the pathways that leads to a negative psychological evaluation of the outgroup. In addition, ideology plays an important role in escalating or reducing conflict due to its influence on motivation, cognition, and society [14; 15]. The behavioral outcome caused by using ideology to guide the thinking process can be classified as violent and nonviolent behavior.

In Study 2, religious fundamentalism predicts both violent and nonviolent behavior of Sundanese Muslim participants. This supports previous studies on the relationship between Muslim identity and religious fundamentalism [23]. This finding is different from previous study suggesting that fundamentalists tend to act hostilely [21; 22; 55].

Another finding shows that religious fundamentalism is equally related to violent and nonviolent behavior. This is in line with Kashyap and Lewis, who stated that Muslim and Christian religiosity have the same effect on moral and social attitudes [20]. Conversely, Baier stated that religion is not correlated with violence [1]. Perceived injustice was used to explain the role of religious fundamentalism in conflict-related behavior. Religious fundamentalism has a greater chance of inciting violence when individuals have high perceived injustice. This supports Pauwels and Heylen, who found that perceived injustice only played a role in religious fundamentalism toward violence [30].

Despite its contributions, this study was focused only on Indonesian Sundanese population. Thus, the generalization can further be developed by studying other populations such as other ethnicities or religions. Future research can also explore other personal and social factors influencing conflict-related behaviors.

Conclusions

The study of the religious ideology of fundamentalism and conflict behavior, which is divided into violent and nonviolent behavior, as well as the important role of perceived injustice in the moderation model is tested through qualitative and quantitative methods. The qualitative data described emotional responses, cognition, and behavioral responses to religious-based conflict from an indigenous perspective and highlighted the role of religious-based ideology and perceived injustice influencing these behaviors. Quantitative data confirmed that perceived injustice has a significant role in conflict behavior with the religious ideology of fundamentalism as a predictor. The results of these two studies provide a new perspective on previous research that has not been consistent. Further research may explore possible prevention and intervention in response to violent behavioral responses.

Dear Dr. Agus Abdul Rahman,

The subject of the article "Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice" is interesting for the editors of the journal, but the material in English is presented in this way that in its current form, readers would have difficulty comprehending what the authors are trying to communicate.

Unfortunately, we have to tell that your article cannot be recommended for publication in its current form.

Respectfully,
editors of the journal "Social Psychology and Society"

Dear Dr. Elena Vinogradova,

I hope this email finds you well. I checked the status of my article submission via the online journal system and it is still under review. I was wondering about how long the process will take? I would be grateful if you could give me the time estimation of this review process until the decision is made. Looking forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,

Dr. Agus Abdul Rahman, M.Psi, Psikolog

Dear Agus Abdul Rahman:

We have reached a decision regarding your submission to Social Psychology and Society, "Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice".

Our decision is: Revisions Required

The subject of the article is interesting, but your article need to be finalized.

Please find attached a peer review of your articles (see below).

To note: the journal 'Social Psychology and Society' practices double-blind peer-review, which means that the reviewers are not aware of the author's name and vice versa.

Respectfully,

editors of the journal "Social Psychology and Society"

COMMENTS

The title of the article is narrower than its purpose and reflects mainly the results of study 2. At the same time, the relation of study 1 to the general purpose and topic of the article is not clear. A broader title of the article or a clearer interpretation of the relationship between the results of Study 1 and the topic of the article is required. In the results of study 2, it is not clear what is meant by "hypothetical means". Do you mean test norms in the population or something else? A clearer description of this idea is needed. The description of the results of study 2 contains some shortcomings. For example, in the fragment "(r=.107, p=0.21)", zero appears to be missing (maybe you mean r=.107, p=0.021?). Zeros are also omitted in the correlations in the text below, for example (r = 197, p = .000). If p is less than 0.001, then I recommend to write "p ≤ .001". The results of the correlation analysis presented in the text make it difficult to understand the relationships between the measured variables. I would recommend that the authors provide a typical table in APA format, including correlations between all measured variables, their means and standard deviations. For the revealed moderation effect, it is necessary to indicate the level of significance. There are shortcomings in the list of references (see, for example, sources No. 5, 8, 12, etc.) Thus, the manuscript needs major revision.

Reviewer C:

COMMENTS

The statement of the problem and the substantiation of the relevance are done quite professionally and convincingly. Nevertheless, the hypotheses and methods used require a more detailed description. The statistical methods used by the authors (frequency analysis and correlation analysis) are quite simple. The authors mention the regression analysis and analysis of the effects of moderation, but there are no results presented using these methods in the article. The authors' most important finding, that perceived injustice reinforces the association between religiousness and willingness to engage in violence, has not been proven. The idea is interesting, but the article can be accepted only after significant revision.

Dear Agus Abdul Rahman:

We have reached a decision regarding your submission to Social Psychology and Society, "Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice".

Our decision is: Revisions Required

There is a significant improvement with the article, however we would recommend several changes to make it more appropriate for publication. First, please add which software was used for data analysis. Secondly, add limitations of your study in conclusion, as well as add directions for future research.

Respectfully,

Dear Rahman A.,

Your article is being prepared for publication in the fourth issue of 2023 of the journal Social Psychology and Society, but must be finalized according to the MSUPE Journal Manuscript Preparation Guidelines:

- in the article, when giving the link, it is necessary to mention the number of the source from the reference list and not the names of the authors;
- References:
 1. Indicate the numbers of the volume, issue and page of the articles;
 2. Indicate the quantity of pages in the books.

Follow the patterns below to arrange the reference list:

The book:

1. Digital literacies for learning. In Martin A., Madigan D. (eds.). London: Facet Publishing, 2006. 304 p.
2. Gilster P. Digital literacy. New York: Wiley Computer Pub., 1997. 292 p.

Dear Agus Abdul Rahman,

Your article "Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice" is being prepared for publication in the fourth issue of 2023 of the journal Social Psychology and Society, but your article needs to be finalized according to the MSUPE Journal Manuscript Preparation Guidelines

- in the article, when giving the link, it is necessary to mention the number of the source from the reference list and not the names of the authors;
- References:
 1. Indicate the numbers of the volume, issue and page of the articles;
 2. Indicate the quantity of pages in the books.

Follow the patterns below to arrange the reference list:

The book:

1. Digital literacies for learning. In Martin A., Madigan D. (eds.). London: Facet Publishing, 2006. 304 p.
2. Gilster P. Digital literacy. New York: Wiley Computer Pub., 1997. 292 p.

The article in the book:

3. Brito R., Dias P. Technologies and children up to 8 years old: What changes in one year? Observatorio, 2019. Vol. 13, no. 2, pp. 68–86. DOI:10.15847/obsOBS13220191366

Уважаемый автор, Agus Abdul Rahman!

Первый этап редактирования рукописи "Conflict-Related Behavior among Sundanese Muslim Students: The Role of Ideology and Perceived Injustice" завершен. Текст готов для дальнейшей работы и публикации в журнале "Социальная психология и общество" (утверждение изменений автором, корректура, верстка, проверка библиографии и др.).

Для просмотра внесенных изменений и созданных в тексте вопросов автору, пожалуйста, следуйте инструкциям:

1. Перейдите на сайт журнала по приведенной ниже ссылке URL и авторизуйтесь, используя свой логин и пароль (если Вы не помните свой логин и пароль, воспользуйтесь службой восстановления пароля).
2. Щелкните по файлу под надписью "1. Исходная правка". Файл с правками редактора будет сохранен на компьютере его можно будет открыть для просмотра и изменений.
3. Просмотрите текст, внесите необходимые изменения (в режиме "Записи Исправлений" MS WORD) и ответьте на поставленные редактором вопросы.
4. Сохраните файл и загрузите его на сайт (строка "Правка", кнопка "Выбрать файл", потом кнопка "Закачать") на Шаг 2. Авторская правка.
5. Кликните на иконку письма в конце строки "Правка" напротив надписи "Авторская правка" и отправьте сообщение редактору о завершении проверки внесенных изменений и работы над текстом рукописи.

Это последняя возможно для Вас внести существенные изменения в текст рукописи. Редакция в дальнейшем попросит Вас просмотреть предпечатную версию статьи (верстку), но в ней можно будет сделать лишь небольшие изменения (устранить опечатки и ошибки, допущенные при верстке).

Ссылка на рукопись URL: <https://editorial.mgppu.ru/sps/author/submissionEditing/1679>

Логин для входа в систему: agus.abdulrahman@uinsgd.ac.id

Если Вы по каким-либо причинам не можете осуществить проверку изменений и ответить на вопросы редактора в тексте рукописи, пожалуйста, свяжитесь с редакцией журнала.

Спасибо за выбор нашего журнала для публикации Вашей работы.

Dear Anna Alexandrovna Butorina,

Thank you for your email. I have reviewed the manuscript and uploaded it in the Author version as instructed. Let me know if you need further assistance. Thank you.

Regards,
Agus Abdul Rahman

The screenshot shows a web browser window with a pink header bar containing tabs for "[psj] Editor Decision - itsnuraini" and "[СПиО] Завершено редактирование рукописи". The main content area displays a manuscript review interface. On the left, there's a sidebar titled "Copyediting" with "COPYEDIT INSTRUCTIONS" and "Copyeditor" listed as "Anna Aleksandrovna Butorina". The main panel has a "REVIEW METADATA" table with three rows:

	REQUEST	UNDERWAY	COMPLETE
1. Initial Copyedit	24.11.2023	24.11.2023	01.12.2023
File: 1679-28402-2-CE.DOCX	01.12.2023
