ABSTRACT

Ulfah Wafa Almubarokah. 2024. Da'wah for the Blind (Phenomenological Study at the Sam'an Quran Islamic Boarding School, Cimanyan, Bandung).

Da'wah is an obligation for everyone regardless of physical condition. The Sam'an Quran Islamic Boarding School is an institution that specifically facilitates blind people with disabilities to learn more about religion, starting from the leadership down to the students, the majority are blind people with disabilities. The presence of this Islamic boarding school has become an inspiration for blind people to study religion through increasing awareness of the equal rights and abilities of blind people.

The aim of this research is to determine the actions of da'wah and social interactions using a phenomenological study approach regarding the motives, experiences and meaning of da'wah of Islamic boarding school administrators together with students with visual disabilities at the Sam'an Quran Islamic Boarding School.

The research theory used to find out and analyze the motives, experiences and meaning of preaching through Alfred Schutz's phenomenological study. This research uses a qualitative approach. The data collection technique in this research is in-depth interviews with semi-structured techniques.

The research results show that the Sam'an Quran Islamic Boarding School as a missionary institution for blind people provides positive energy for blind people and the surrounding community. Be it students with visual disabilities, sighted people, or administrators, the positive impact produced by interactions can be felt while they carry out activities at the Sam'an Quran Islamic Boarding School. 1). The missionary motives of the administrators consist of two types, namely, cause motives and goal motives which become the impetus or trigger in improving the students' abilities starting from the realization of hopes made into the vision and mission (social needs), the realization of learning abilities in carrying out activities as blind people (blind people with disabilities), self-esteem needs), as well as proof to other blind people and the public that blind people have the same ability to achieve their identity (self-actualization needs). 2). The experience of preaching through Islamic boarding schools is part of preaching charity, socializing and communicating with blind people as a form of the concept of social interaction and the concept of action in line with Mead's theory of symbolic interaction. 3). Meaning becomes a social awareness and thought for administrators in facilitating the development of blind people by increasing their ability and independence in daily mobility, as well as instilling a spirit of inclusion through increasing accessibility for blind people, providing various knowledge, as well as religious practices and developing an inclusive environment. These three meanings are the implementation of various da'wah activities.
